the 1990s, the number of people with a mental health problem has increased in the UK. In 1990, 1.5 million people were registered with a mental health problem, but this has risen to 2.5 million in 2005 (Mental Health Act 1983, 2003).

There is a growing awareness of the need to improve the lives of people with mental health problems. The Government has set out a vision for mental health care in the UK (Department of Health, 2005). This vision is based on the following principles:

- People with mental health problems should be treated as individuals, with their own needs and wishes.
- People with mental health problems should be given the opportunity to participate in decisions about their care and treatment.
- People with mental health problems should be given the opportunity to live in their own homes and communities.
- People with mental health problems should be given the opportunity to work and study.

The Government has also set out a vision for mental health care in the UK (Department of Health, 2005). This vision is based on the following principles:

- People with mental health problems should be treated as individuals, with their own needs and wishes.
- People with mental health problems should be given the opportunity to participate in decisions about their care and treatment.
- People with mental health problems should be given the opportunity to live in their own homes and communities.
- People with mental health problems should be given the opportunity to work and study.
